HOME EDUCATION:
A STORY OF EVERY DAY LIFE.

'Come Kitty, you must stir about lively to day—there's baking to do, the front to clean, and dinner to get, besides a host of other things. and after all's done I want you to take the children to the square for a couple of hours this afternoon.'

'Yes mam, I'll try to get through in time, tho' I don't feel quite as smart as common this morning, as I was up so late last night ironing.'

'Now Kitty, said Mrs. Makedoo, that's the very time to work, when you don't feel like it, make that a rule through life, and you will always find yourself doing something you don't like to, it will be a satisfaction to you to know how much you can accomplish in that way.'

The dear knows,' said Kitty, 'I've had to practice that hard rule from necessity long enough, but what shall I do about bringing down the breakfast tray, as Miss Arminta has not yet breakfasted.'

'So she hasn't Kitty, and I guess I might as well run up and wake her now, as 'tis teh o'clock—Poor thing she come home so late last night from the party, that I told her to sleep as long as she could this morning. I really wonder if the dear gal ever gets well rested—I'll go and see if she wants her toast and coffee in her room.'

With these remarks the doating mother ascends the staircase on her errand of inquiry.

In the meanwhile Kitty makes loud and impatient music with her kettles and thus soliliquises—

'Yes baking to do, dinner to get, the front to clean—it's all mighty easy talking—then when my lady get's up she'll got to be waited on, very likely she'll send me on some errand to the milliners and when I come back she'll want a dress pressed in a minute to walk out in. Yes Kitty can do it, it's nothing for Kitty, but I guess if she had my weak back and tired feet she'd lay a bed a week and send me for the doctor——'

'Kitty,' screamed her mistress at the top of her voice from the head of the stairs.

'Mam,'

'Are there any eggs in the house?'

'No mam—there it is again, now I just wonder what they want with eggs this time a day.'

'Step out somewhere and buy a few, Arminta thinks she could eat one on her toast.'

'Yes mam, but how can I leave the bread that's just ready to bake?'

'Oh be quick Kitty and the bread will not suffer.'

Away went the distracted housemaid for the eggs, and when she returned and cooked one and took it up to the young lady's room, where she had the satisfaction of hearing from that individual that it wasn't half done, and more than that, she had waited so long that her appetite was all gone, and she could not bear the sight of it.

Well, after much labor the work was pretty well through with, and dinner served up at the usual hour. Arminta managed with the help of her mother to dress herself, and thereby enabled to make her appearance in the dining room with her heavy blue eyes and dress to match, about the time of her fathers entrance, appetite being unusually good, she contrived to smell a bit of roast beef, and succeeded in eating three Lima beans after gracefully taking the skin off of each one. 'Pa,' said she very languidly, I heard some one at the party last night speaking of a delightful ghost story—'Hamlet,' I believe is the name of the man that saw the sceptre, and I do wish you would get it for me, if it is in two volumes you needn't mind it, though as I should never get time to read it. Who knows but what it is as interesting as Dombey?'

'It would not be to you,' replied her father very gravely.

Then don't trouble yourself about it Pa you know my taste, and can easily judge, but I do wish another number of Dombey would come- I'm so anxious to know if sweet Florence has heard from her beau, Walter Gray, and if he ever intends to come back again. Where was it he went Pa—to Mexico?'

'Mexico fiddlestick child! he went to the Indies; and I know where I have a notion to send you.'

Oh where Pa? this is delightful weather for travelling.'

To school, replied her impatient father for you mortify me to death with your stupidity. However your mother tells me to morrow will be your eighteenth birthday; and I suppose you will expect a hand some present. Now as you have an idea of being married before a great while, it is time you understood the practical part of house keeping and my gift to you shall be either a good sized broom or scrubbing brush; which I shall insist upon your using.

But Arminta had fainted before the conclusion of this sentence.

Only see what you have done, exclaimed his wife as she ran in haste to her daughters assistance.

Don't disturb her said her husband, she has only fainted and I warrant she comes to in time for this evenings concert. If she would take more healthful exercise she could hardly stop the circulation at a short notice. and with this consoling speech. Mr Makedoo went to his counting house. Kitty was called again to bring the cologne bottle and fan from Arminta a room besides other jobs, which left little time for the kitchen department, but by dint of hard labor and perseverance she found time to take the children a walking, and then hurried home to get supper.

At the table Mr Makedoo said the bread was sour. The blame as usual rested on Kitty, who was immediately summoned to account for it.

When she made her appearance she gave a piteous detail of the events of the morning—how she had to do so many errands after the bread was ready for baking that she could not help it.

Her mistress said that was no excuse who ever as she might have hurried more than she did, and that the bread would have been sweet and good.

Mr Makedoo looked frowningly at his wife and daughter.

'Susan,' said he to the former, if Arminta had at least been taught to wait upon herself a little, and give some slight assistance in the house, Kitty would not be imposed on, as it is, if you would dress her less foolishly and expensively, you would then find yourself able to keep more help on your own account.'

His wife put her laced pocket handkerchief to her eyes, and his daughter was looking for a convenient place to swoon and for fear of another scene the unhappy husband and father left the apartment.

Mrs. Makedoo went below to give that lazy Kitty as she termed her, a complete blowing up.

It seems to me. Kitty, you complain a great deal about nothing—pray where did you live before you came here.

The poor girl, being fairly roused, replied that she lived with Mrs. Harris, who was something like a lady, and never expected too much from her.

I used to know her very well, pray why did you leave her.

Because her oldest daughter had left school and she said wished her to learn to work, but while there was so much help in the house she hadn't half a chance, so as nancy, the other girl, had been there longer than I had, she sent me away with kind words and useful presents. I cant think answered mrs Makedoo, that Mrs. Harris would do so ungenteel a thing as to oblige her daughter to do housework but I'll call there soon and find out for myself.

True to her word, Mrs. Makedoo called to see Mrs. Harris on the following Tuesday, and Lucy the eldest daughter, answered the bell which somewhat shocked her ideas of propriety.

Why Lucy,' dear, said she, how flushed you look—have you a fever, or what is the matter?'

Lucy, radiant with health and good humor, said she was entirely well, but had been ironing all the morning: and as Nancy was sweeping the third story, she told her she would attend to the bell in her absence.

Mrs. Harris now entered the parlor, and Lucy, after excusing herself, returned to her work.

How do you do, my dear Susan, said Mrs. Harris, cordially extending her hand to her welcome guest.

I am very well, I thank you, Mary.'

And how are Arminta and the children?'

O, the children are well but troublesome as usual, though I dont know much about them. Arminta is often dull and has no appetite at all. Poor thing, as Mrs Chick said of old Dombey's effort.—'Tis hardly worth while to ask for Lucy she looks so very rosy, almost too much so to suit my taste. By the way I heard from my Kitty that you had put her to work, and one reason of my calling was to know the truth of it. Have you really done such an out-of-the-way thing!'

I am very happy to answer in the affirmative, Susan, when she left school, her occupation seemed gone, she became listless and languid, her appetite left her, and in our anxiety we consulted a physician in regard to her health. He told us the best thing for health was daily and regular exercise, though moderate at first, until her strength could bear more. So after Mr. and myself had talked the matter over. I dismissed one of my girls, and went hand in hand for a while with Lucy to encourage her. She now makes all the beds in the chambers occasionally, always helps to iron the clothes, and frequently assists in cooking. You must take tea, with us, and taste some of her bread, it is so delicious.

But dont she dress herself in her best and walk out every day? My Arminta could not exist without that.'

She is always neat in her dresses, but seldom walks merely for promenade. She is interested in every household department, and has sufficient exercise in doors for her health. Her appetite and spirits are both good, and we are glad we had the firmness to make her useful and thereby happy; her needle too is not idle, as I am frequently indebted to her for much assistance with the childrens garments.'

What will Arminta think of all this? said Mrs Makedoo, why Mary we only keep one girl, though I often think there work enough in the house for two, but it never entered my head to call on my daughter for help. Dear me she is the most waited on in the family.

I hope you will be encouraged, Susan to do as I have done, and bestow a little of the care on her that your mother bestowed on you, for fashionable as you have become, you cannot disguise the truth that you were not taught to work as well as myself. Do you not remember when we lived neighbors in the country, the many useful lessons our mother gave us and when our present husbands courted our favor do you suppose they thought the less of us for being industious.

It is different in the city Mary.

The difference Susan is only in our own mind and arises from false pride, I have chosen to stick to first principals, believing it will save my child much unhappiness in future. The fate of other nations depends in a great measure upon a mothers training, and parents cannot be too much alive to their responsibilities.—I beg you will consider this subject deeply, and pray for wisdom to direct you.

Mrs. Makedoo had listened in silence. Then her thoughts went back to childhoods home beautiful and refreshing to her memory as to herself, when her innocent thoughts and childish sports had an Eden of that secluded spot, when the song of early birds awakened her from health breathing slumbers, and she arose with the dawn, light hearted and happy to perform her daily duties, trifling as they were perhaps in reality.

But rendered important and regularly exacted by a mother anxious for her daughters welfare and ever watchful to direct her youthful footsteps in the way that brings peace and happiness in the world to come.

Alas! alas! where stood she now?—It seemed as if all those early lessons and sweet counsels had been buried in the grave of her departed mother. The rank weeds had come up and smothered the young buds of promise—how thought she have I fulfilled my trust toward the mortal soul committed to my care?—The ways of high life in a fashion-bound city have blinded my judgement and better, knowledge, my child has grown up beneath my eye, ignorant of all that enobles and exalts our nature—vanity and love of dress the only aim of her existence.

Tis too late now Mary, said Mrs. Makedoo, as she arose in haste to take her departure, tis too late to undo the deep injury I have done my daughter! if she lives, she will have plenty of trouble, like the rest of us, and in the hours of trial she, perhaps, and justly too, blame her mother for not teaching how to meet and how to bear it. I will go home and talk to my husband, I know his heart will gladden at a reform in the matter, he will engourage me to do what is yet in power for Araminta—and I promise you, my dear Mary, to try and take the rest of my children in good season for improvement.

WASHINGTON CITY D. C.

SATURDAY MARCH 24 1849

MINESOTA.

This Territory like California is left without a government, the Senate refusing to confirm the nomination of the President for a governor. It is a matter of much grief and disquiet to our friend of the Union, as to whether President Taylor "will be able to congratulate himself upon the triumph which must cover his pillow with the thorns of office.'

We trust Mr R. may get over it without a spell of sickness. It is strange that such anxiety should be felt by Mr R. He refers to the case of Mr McGaughey, whom the Senate refused to confirm, and thinks President Taylor could not know that Mr McG. voted 'against granting supplies for the war, opposed the war' &c. They know little of human nature, that would suppose a man of Gen Taylor's great mind would harbour malice, or a desire of revenge for anything said or done against himself. And as to the 'thorns' or roses of office from the malice of foes or the flattery of false friends he will be found proof against either the one or the other, or we are much mistaken in the man. He is well aware of the motive which is to draw his attention from his duty.

They used to do the same with Gen Jackson, "that long eared animal up in that house," pointing and then run to some friend exulting in their smartness, and say, "'should not wonder if he did not pack off bag and baggage to Tennessee," from the annoyance—while Gen Jackson did not know that such poor contemptible creatures existed. We have a funny anecdote about that.

SENATE.

In looking over some of the debates in Congress, we are surprised to hear the members of the senate on the subject of New Orleans, and Mr Jefferson—use the following language,

"But what if I open to the Senator a fact or two more in regard to Mr Jefferson and the democratic party of that time, in order to enable him to appreciate the almost Jackson-like energy of that high souled executive?"

After speaking sometime. (we think it was Mr Foote in reply to Mr Clayton,) and quoting Mr Jefferson he added, 'Now sir, there is Jefferson-democracy for you."

It is surprising that gentlemen of intelligence and learning, do not try to lead the ignorant by setting proper examples, instead of being led by them—there was no such term as Democracy in use in Mr. Jefferson's time. Mr Jefferson was a Republican, "Mr Jefferson and the Democratic party of that time" (!!!!) There was no such party at that time, the word was unknown, excepting in ancient history. Alas! how the mighty have fallen! There were two parties at that time however, these were Federalists and Republicans.* We never heard Democracy used in this country until the first term of Gen. Jackson's Presidency, but especially the second term.

After the Kitchen Cabinet was firmly organized, the new government which succeeded through the misplaced confidence of Gen. Jackson, and Maj. Donalson. He then gave up everything to them and took his ease, and Democracy rang from one end of the Union to the other, and the man who would say 'I am a true Democrat, or a Jackson-man up to the Hub.' The literal meaning of it was 'I am for office, or extras, don't care which, and just name what service you want done, and here is my hand. Thus they [the swindlers] are called Democracy it was a kind of free-Mason sign, though some of the best and most respectable men in our country were amongst them. But these were Democrats from principle, gentlemen of honor and veracity, stayed at home, and attended to their own business, while the hirelings of the Kitchen Cabinet, were travelling over the country in swarms electioneering, they had plenty of money and were furnished with Maps and written instructions.

Seeing a stranger standing in the street before our door one morning with a paper open in his hand, which he often looked down upon—alternately taking a view in a Southern direction, his back was toward us—when he turned we spoke to him, and asked him if he would not walk in and warm, and take some breakfast, He did so, and finally we discovered that he wished to visit that part of the country between Annapolis and Virginia, and enquired of us what road he should take from Washington? Hereupon he showed his map and other papers, and very innocently observed—"I believe there is smart chance of Democrats there," "Voters you mean." He smiled and signified all the country had been waited upon but this spot. He was from the west. It was about the election of Gen. Harrison. This is democracy. Do they find this in the Constitution? Every school boy knows that there never was but one Democratic government, that was Athens.

CHURCH AND STATE.

Having said this much we return to a subject which has long engaged our feeble pen— we mean the stratagems of one portion of mankind to subdue his fellow men—reduce them to servitude, rob them of 'God's three best blessing, the freedom of religion,' the freedom of speech and the freedom of the press.

There is not a scheme plot,† or contrivance the ingenuity of man can suggest, or covetousness crave, or power could devise that has not been put in requisition to this end.

* Every one recollects Mr Jefferson's Inaugural address, in which is found these words—"Fellow citizens, we are all Federalists, we are all Republicans."

† It would make one shudder to see great course masculine females, without one trace of modesty in their countenance, empting the Fulton boxes of their change into their big reticules to spread the gospel.

The Fulton Family having become destitute after the death of Mr Fulton, appealed to Congress year after year, in the most pathetic and humble style, but were refused (until last year) for want of a precedent, save the mark! In consequence of this, the Captains of the Western Steamboats out of gratitude to Mr Fulton for the benefits he confered on them, and his country, had boxes nailed up to the sides of their respective boats, and solicited donations from passengers. But these avaricious wretches, the Church & State, by foul or fair means contrived to appropriate the money boxes to themselves. Any one that would do so would steal, which many of them have done.

FREE SOIL, CHURCH & STATE.

We have often warned the people that this Free Soil party was a mere cover of the Church and State party, to divert the attention of the people, while they are secretly making preparation for the onset. The following seems to throw some light upon the subject. It is an extract from an article in the Era upon the peaceful and gradual Abolition of Slavery in Kentucky, in which the 'noiseless' abolition of the 'villenage' (slavery) of England is mentioned. The gentlemen are for war.

"Were it true therefore, that certain moral causes noiselessly abolished the system of villenage, it does not follow that the same causes will silently remove Slavery from this country. The remedies for an evil are to be determined, not only by its character but its intensity and the particular circumstances of the case. A simple febrifuge may assuage a slight fever but a severe course of treatment must be necessary for one deeper seated and more aggravated."

What is that remedy? Why don't they speak out? One may see from this that civil war is their destination. The man who can be imposed upon by the free soil scheme must be dull indeed, The following is plainer. It is remarks on religious papers in Louisville Ky.

"The inference is legitimate. The Church is the professed expounder and advocate of this Law. To its keeping are intrusted the doctrines, institutions and usages of the Christian religion. By its very constitution it is pledged to action against every doctrine, institution usage, incompatible with them. Inaction is treachery. It is incapable of maintaining neutrality in the strict sense of that term, upon any question involving moral principle. Where it is silent upon any question the unavoidable inference is either that no principles involved in the controversy concerning such question are repugnant to its principles, or that it is false to itself and to the religion it professes to regard as of supreme obligation. The Journal will not charge it with a betrayel of trust in regard to the evil of Slavery but infers from its policy that there is nothing in Slavery repugnant to the religion of which the Church is the expounder! Its neutrality then is the judgment of the world is identical with hostility to the cause of Emancipation."

So they show the cloven foot at last! We never doubted it, we heard the plan developed by the pious gentlemen themselves, while we travelled with them in stage coaches through the Western part of the State of New York, the most ignorant part of the United States excepting 'Old Virginny,' and West Pa. They had lots of 'young ladies' with them who were lavish in expressions, of what we should call love toward their companions, under the rose, we being a stranger and indifferently dressed, no attention was paid to us.

Again from the same paper—observe the artifice in mingling several clergymen of different characters, amongst whom they slip in the odious Thomson, so noted in this country,

From the National Era.

SKETCHES OF MODERN REFORMS AND REFORMERS, IN GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.

No 23.—Some Anti Slavery Clergymen—Rev. Dr. Thomson—Rev Dr. Wardlow—Rev. Dr. Ritchie—Rev. Mr. James.

In this number I will will briefly notice three or four distinguished clergymen, who rendered important serve in the anti-slavery cause.

North of the Tweed, was Rev. Andrew Thomson, D. D. ., of Edinburg, a leading minister of the Kirk of Scotland. He has been dead several years. Posthumous fame tells wondrous tales of his overpowering eloquence. The reports of his speeches, which I have read,, show him to have been a son of thunder. He did not polish the angles of his sentences so much as Dr Chalmers, but he possessed in large measure the comprehensive views, argumentive power, and splendid imagination, which distinguished that great devine, while, in directness and point, and ability to arouse and sway the passions of men, he undoubtedly excelled him.'

It is from these clergymen and others in England of the same stamp that the scheme of uniting Church and State in this country took its rise. May Heaven avert their treachery, 'all law is centered in the Church,' God help the people, then they will bleed freely, remember our own shores.

'Slavery is hostile to the original and essential rights of our common humanity contrary to the inflexible and paramount demands of moral justice, at eternal variance with the spirit and maxims of revealed religion: inimical to all that is merciful in the heart and holy in the conduct; and on these accounts necessarily exposed and subject to the curse of Almighty God."

What fiends! God in their mouth and a dagger in their hand! and these are the very refuse of fanatics.

"But if you wish to push me, and still urge the argument of insurrection and bloodshed, for which you are far more indebted to fancy than to fact, as I have shown you, then, I say, be it so. I repeat that maxim, taken from a heathen book, but pervading the whole Book of God—Fiat justitia, ruat coelum. Righteousness is the pillar of the universe. Break down that, and the universe falls into desolation. But preserve it, and though the fabric may sustain partial dilapidations it may be rebuilt and repaired- it will be rebuilt, and repaired, and restored to all pristine strength, and magnificence, and beauty. If there must be violence, let it even come, for it will soon pass away, let it come and rage its little hour, since it is to be succeeded by lasting freedom, and prosperity, and peace. Give me the hurricane rather than the pestilence. Give me the hurricane, with its thunder, its lightning, and its tempest, give the the hurrican with it partial and temporary devastations, awful thought they be, give me the hurricane, with its purifying, healthful, salutary effects, give me that hurricane infinitely rather than the noisesome pestilence, whose path is never crossed, whose silence is never disturbed whose progress is never arrested, by one sweeping blast from the heavens, which walks silently and sullenly through the land, breathing poison into every heart, and carrying hovoc into every home enervating all that is strong, defacing all that is beautiful, casting its blight over the fairest and happiest scenes of human life and which, from day to day, and from year to year, with intolerent and interminable malignity, sends its thousand and its tens of thousands of hapless victims into the ever yawning and never satisfied grave.'

No one can be mistaken in this language.

LOOK OUT AS THE BOYS SAY FOR SPIES!

We understand Mr Bradford of Virginia, the spy of the Kitchen Cabinet is now in the city, to get an office we presume. He is one of the most dangerous men that could be found he was here once before, and took his seat in the room of the chief clerk of the treasury, Col Young, at the head of a passage from whence he could see into the next room, where sat Secretary Woodbury. But this was not all, he had a door that opened to his left into the main passage, so that if any person passed through that way into the secretary's room he could see likewise. He had the appearance of being commander-in-chief, but was always silent. He certainly did not hold the office for the sake of money, for he was a rich man through his wife; and has no children.

REMEMBER THE POOR.

Remember the poor,
It fearfully snoweth,
And bitterly bloweth,
Thou could'st not endure
The tempest's wild power
Through night's dreary hour,
Then pity the poor.

Remember the poor;
The father is lying
In that hovel dying
With sickness of heart;
No voice cheers his dwelling,
Of Jesus' love telling;
Ere life shall depart.

Remember the poor;
The widow is sighing,
The orphans are crying,
Half starving for bread,
With eargerness speed ye
To succor the needy,
Their helper is dead.

Remember the poor,
The baby is sleeping,
Its cheeks wet with weaping;
On its mothers breast,
Whose cough deep and hollow;
Foretells she'll soon follow
Her husband to rest.

A year since I was taken with the influenza and my whole system left in a debilitated state. I was induced to try Dr. Townsend's Sarsaparilla;

The belief expressed in their last Prospectus, that the POST is destined to take its stand at the very head of the weekly press, is fast becoming realized. The reason of this is in a great degree, to be found on the stand the POST has always taken against the immoral literature of the day. Reduced prices to Clubs. Counted to be the "Best of the Weeklies."

This popular newspaper having just entered its sixth volume ,the proprietors have determined to give it new attractions for the public. accordingly they will present a series of

ILLUSTRATED SKETCHES BY JACOB JONES.

ORIGINAL PRIZE TALES.

The publication of the original prize tales will be continued, as well as of other interesting original matter. A FAMILY JOURNAL.

It is the first wish of the editors to make their paper a perfect family newspaper family journal, which old and young may read with profit and pleasure alike. For this purpose the news of the week is collected with the greatest care Everything transpiring in the world of of news is weekly presented to our readers accompanied with appropriate editorial article

A LADIES PARLOR COMPANION.

This a department of the Gazette which must have struck its readers with being widely different from other weekly journals, Our effort has been to combine with a high-toned and sprightly family paper articles of a more serious and useful kind, especially interesting and important to ladies. Mrs Neal has the entire control of this Department, and when we add that the following Ladies of rank in the literary world are constant contributors to Neals gazette, we show that the paper is conducted with a marked reference to the interests of the sex;— Miss Leslie, Fanny Forester, Mrs Osgood, Mrs C, H, Butler Mrs Swift, Mrs. Hale, Mrs Caroline Orne, Mrs Hall, Mrs E, F, Ellet, Anna Duval, Alice G, Lee, Lydia Jane Pierson, Mecrs M, Duncan, with many others of note and position among the writers of our country.

COMMERCIAL AND AGRICULTURAL

Especial pains are taken to render the 'Commercial and Agricultural Department" of the Gazette of paculiar interest to all men of business, and it will be found that our REPORTS OF THE MARKETS, prepared with especial reference to the objects of the mercantile community, are far more correct, more comprehensive, and earlier in their intelligence than those of any of our contemporaries.

JUVENILE DEPARTMENT.

A comparison of our Juvenile Department with that of any cotempoary will show superiority. We invite this comparison.

THE GLOBE,

Congressional, Agricultural, and Literary Newspaper.

The Editors of the Congressional Globe propose a new publication. To deserve the patronage which Congress has accorded to their reports of its debates, in receiving and making the Globe the official register, they intend to add promptitude to whatever merit has hitherto recommended the work. They will publish a Daily Globe, to record the proceedings and debates as they occur, and a Congressional Globe periodically as heretofore, embodying the reports of Congress separate from the miscellaneous matter which will accompany them in the daily print. To fill the sheet of the daily newspaper, it is designed to gather the news from all quarters, and complete the contents by drawing from every source what ever may be of most interest among literary novelties, and of greatest utility in science, art, or agriculture. For material the leading journals and periodicals of France and Great Britain, treating of such subjects will be consulted and it is hoped, advantageously used. Original essays, especially on topics connected with agriculture, will be obtained from the most enlightened and practical men of our country.

The Globe as a newspaper, and as a vehicle of information and amusement In other respects will be under the charge of Francis P. Blair and James C. Pickett. The Congressional department and business concerns of the paper will be under the management of John C. Rives. The public are familiar with Blair and Rives as connected with the press. In introducing Mr Pickett as one of the concern they will be allowed to say a few words of him. He is a gentleman favorably known to the Government, for the talent and judgment which distinguished his diplomatic service while connected with the mission to Quito, and more recently when Charge d'Affaires to Peru. From him mainly the Globe will derive the selections and translations from the foreign continental journals and periodicals, the comments on them and the other literary articles which will be found among its chief attractions. F. P. Blair will give his attention principally to the English periodicals.

The Globe will be published daily during the session of Congress and weekly the balance of the year and will undergo distribution in the form of a Weekly Globe, a Congressional Globe and Appendix.

The Weekly Globe will contain agricultural and miscellaneous articles.

The Congressional Globe will embody as it has done for the last sixteen years, Congressional proceedings and debates exclusively.

The Appendix will embrace the revised speeches seperately and the messages of the President of the United States and the reports of the Heads of the Executive Departments.

The Congressional Globe and appendix will be published as fast as the proceedings of Congress will make a number Subscribers may expect one number of each a week during the first four weeks of a session and two or three numbers of each a week afterwards, until the end of the session.

Complete indexes to the Congressional Globe and appendix, will be sent to subscribers soon after Congress adjourns.

TERMS.

For one copy of the Daily Globe daily during the session of Congress, and weekly during the recess, a year, $5 00

For one copy of the Weekly Globe one year, 2 00

For one copy of the Congressional Globe during the present session, if subscribed for before the first of January, 1 00

For one copy of the Appendix during the present session, if subscribed for before the first of January, 1 00

For six copies of either the Congressional Globe or the appendix, or part of both, 5 00

The subscription for the Congressional Globe or the Appendix after the 10th of January will be $1 50. The original price of one dollar does not pay the expense of the publications in consequence of the great increase of matter published.
